He received his post secondary education from the Faculties of Management and Law at the University of Manitoba. Linton earned his multi-engine pilot wings, the highest instructional category available from the Canadian Air Force. With this and his commission as an officer, he was put in charge of the training and evaluation of Air Force supervisors and instructors. He also acquired years of first-hand practical experience as a manager, coach, and leader. For the last nine years, Linton has conducted training of managers and supervisors and provided leadership consultation to businesses and other organizations. Specializing in leadership, he developed the Workplace Leadership Course to address the issues faced by the leader in the modern workplace.
